James Gelsthorpe has been practising at the Bar since 2011. He prosecutes and defends in serious cases in the Crown Court, both on his own and as junior counsel and has appeared in cases of murder, fraud and historic abuse allegations. He also deals with complex medical cases in a regulatory context and is frequently called upon to digest and present dense technical material in an accessible and easily understandable way.

Crime

In crime James regularly appears in the Crown Court for both defence and prosecution. He is experienced with sensitive issues of domestic violence and dealing with vulnerable witnesses.

James has acted for local authorities in private prosecutions in trading standards, environmental protection and planning offences.

He also regularly deals with driving offences in the Magistrates' Court.

Relevant Experience

- Defending a man charged with wounding with intent. James successfully argued that there was no case to answer and the lesser offence of unlawful wounding was left to the jury who acquitted the defendant of all offences.
- Prosecution of seven defendants in a conspiracy to breach immigration law by arranging 'sham marriages'.
